COUNCIL MEETING TUESDAY EVENING

On account of Monday, the 13th, being recognized as a legal holiday, Columbus day, the City Council met on Tuesday evening, all members being present, Mayor H. H. Smith presiding.

A communication was received from Grace Doughty, asking permission to open a grocery store in the basement at 59 Risel avenue, opposite General Pershing school. As this district is classed as first residential, the request was denied.

The Board of Fire Commissioners sent in a communication advising the Council that William Goldberg, of 125 Shakespeare street, had been unanimously elected a member of Station No. 1, filling the vacancy left by A. Hershel.

The California Sewage Association advised the Council by communication that they are holding their fall meeting at Long Beach. The object of the association is the advancement of the fundamental and practical knowledge concerning the collection, treatment and disposal of sewage and industrial wastes, and the design, construction, operation and management of sewage works in California. An invitation was extended to have our city engineer present. The invitation was referred to the city engineer.

The ordinance committee introduced the new plumbing ordinance, stating that it would be ready for first reading at the next regular meeting of the City Council, on October 27.

Upon recommendation of the water and light committee it was decided to install a light on the south side of Los Banos avenue, about 15 feet west of Mission street, as it is very dark at night at this particular spot.

The Fire Commissioners thanked the Fire Prevention Bureau of San Mateo county for their splendid display of fire hazards that should be eliminated. These fire hazards were on display in the Parent-Teachers' headquarters on Wellington avenue, opposite the post office.

The monthly report of Health Officer Dr. F. P. Callsen was read and ordered filed.

The meeting was then adjourned until next regular meeting night, October 27.

DE MOLAY MEMBERS TO RECEIVE DEGREE

On next Thursday evening, October 23, Crocker Chapter, Order of De Molay, will confer upon twenty-two of its members the Majority degree. This degree will be public and every one is invited to attend. The degree is conferred upon members who have reached the age of twenty-one, and who therefore have no active voice in Chapter procedure. After the degree, dancing will be enjoyed, and a snappy orchestra is promised to supply the music for this affair, which is one of the bright lights of Brother Art Peterson's term as Master Councillor. The program will start at 8 P. M. sharp.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH HAS SUCCESSFUL RALLY DAY

Last Sunday was a rainy Sunday, but instead of feeling discouraged the children of the Presbyterian Sunday school turned out in large numbers and thanked God for the rain. The beginners' department under Eleitta Williams and Kathleen Welsh erected a microphone and proceeded to broadcast the program. Milton Oliotti and Lillian Prescott took the part of King Ahasueras and Queen Esther. Many of the Sunday stories are taught by acting and good times are promised the children in the future.

GENERAL PERSHING P. T. A. STUDY CIRCLE MEETING

The study circle of the General Pershing P. T. A. met at the school on Thursday morning, October 9. The meeting was called by Mrs. C. Pechinino, chairman, to formulate plans for a one day sale of food, clothing and novelties, to be held the latter part of November.

It was also decided to have a whist party soon to raise funds to go toward buying the material for the sale.

Those attending the meeting were Mrs. M. Boyle, Mrs. J. Byrnes, Mrs. D. Campbell, Mrs. L. Forrest, Mrs. H. Howe, Mrs. C. Pechinino, Mrs. H. Watt and Mrs. R. Welsh.

TWO HUNDRED TO BE CONFIRMED SUNDAY

Archbishop Hanna will visit Our Lady of Perpetual Help church, Daly City, next Sunday afternoon, October 19. At 4 P. M. he will administer the sacrament of confirmation to a class of over 200 Daly City boys and girls.

P. T. A. DINNER AND RECEPTION

The Woodrow Wilson and Vista Grande Parent-Teachers' Association received the teachers of their two schools on Wednesday, October 12, in the assembly hall of the Methodist Episcopal church, and treated them very graciously to an excellent dinner. The tables were daintily decorated and nothing else was left undone to make the guests feel perfectly at home. Ample justice was done to every course and a feeling of general appreciation prevailed.

Such receptions do untold good toward establishing complete understanding between the teachers and the parents. Thus the "gaps," if any, are closed permanently.

Mrs. Foss served as chairlady quite well. Mrs. Richman manàged the culinary requirements, and Mrs. A. T. Nylund was busy helping everybody.

A number of the Crocker and the Pershing associations and Mayor H. H. Smith were also among those present.

All the teachers were introduced by the chairlady and a few remarks were requested from Mayor H. H. Smith and W. J. Savage. Both spoke expressing gratefulness for the pleasant occasion and hoped that it would not be the last.

Mr. Savage embraced the opportunity to say that although the schools had been running at high pressure, since the summer vacation, on account of crowded classes, still there had not been any trouble so far, thanks to the earnest work of the teachers and the willing co-operation of the parents. He urged all the teachers to be regular members of the Perent-Teachers' Association.

WEDDING OF POPULAR DALY CITY COUPLE

Miss Rose Parmisano, of Evergreen avenue, became the bride of George Romiguere, of Winchester street, last Saturday evening at 8 o' clock, in Our Lady of Perpetual Help church, Father James Donohoe officiating. The altar boys who assisted Father Donohoe were nephews of the bride and groom, Frank Rancatore and Eugene Green.

The bride was very fashionably dressed in a silhouette gown of ivory satin. She wore a cap-shaped long brial veil of real lace, and carried a shower bouquet of orchids and lilies of the valley. She was given away by her brother, Anthony Parmisano.

The matron of hoonr was Mrs. James Reardon, a sister of the bride. She wore a fashionable gown of orchid satin, with slippers to match, and carried a bouquet of roses.

The bridesmaids were Miss Florence Ranactore, who was dressed in a quaint long dress of green georgette and carried a bouquet of pink roses, and Miss Blanche Romiguere, a sister of the groom, who also wore a quaint gown of salmon pink georgette, and carried a beautiful bouquet of yellow roses.

Eugene Green, the brother-in-law of the groom, was best man.

The ushers were Louis Parmisano, a brother of the bride, and his friend Sal. Guilian. The flower girl, Miss Marie Reardon, carried a beautiful basket of orchid pansies and Cecil Bruener roses. Stanley Parmisano was ring bearer, and was dressed in a white satin suit and carried the conventional white satin pillow.

Loretta Johnson, soloist, sang "Oh Promise Me" and "Ave Maria." There was also a concert on the chimes.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at 9 o'clock at the Bellevue Hotel, San Francisco. A buffet supper was served and a beautiful wedding cake was enjoyed by a hundred and fifty guests. The bridal bouquet was caught by Blanche Romiguere.

The young couple are now touring Southern California on their honeymoon. Upn their return they will take up their residence in their recently completed and furnished home on Irvington street.

Their many friends in Daly City and elsewhere wish them both the happiness they have so richly earned and wish that it may continue through their journey through life together.

SURPRISE BIRTHDAY PARTY

Charles and Albert MacCarthy, of Belleveu avenue, gave their friend Carl Corvell, of Oliver street, a surprise birthday party in honor of his fourteenth birthday, in their home last Friday evening. A most enjoyabel evening was spent in playing indoor gomes. Delicious refreshments were served by Mrs. MacCarthy. The guests were Carl Covell, Ruth and Dorothy Bandoni, Billy Peck, Ruth Marmon, Charles and Albert MacCarthy.

The Trespasser

MERCHANTS' NINE OPPOSE FLORISTS

The Daly City Merchants' nine will oppose the Olympic Florists next Sunday in their second league contest. These rivals were to have played last week end, but rain prevented. The other bookings in the American division are O'Brien, Sportorno & Mitchell vs. Napa Soda Thirties, and Glen Park Merchants vs. Mission Reds.

Manager Cavagnaro has strengthened the local team during the past week by signing anoother high class pitcher, "Curly" Arata. He was formerly with the Ferrera Hardware aggregation. Gene Keagle is greatly in need of a rest, and this young man will relieve the situation.

Arata will face one of the smartest clubs in either division of the Spalding "A" league in his initial start. The florists are not such a hard hitting club, but they play the old army game, it takes two runs to beat one, which makes them hard to upset.

Fred Strand, catcher, is leading the local nine in batting with an average of .395. He has been at bat 38 times and hit safely on 15 occasions. George Rettig is in second palce with a .347 percentage.

Individual averages follow:

	AB.	H.	Pct.
Strand	38	15	.395
Rettig	95	33	.347
Plansky	84	29	.345
Doyle	25	8	.320

LATTER-DAY SAINTS HOLD CONFERENCE

On Sunday, October 12, the Balboa ward, of the San Francisco Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Sints, held its annuaal conference in the George Washington Masonic Hall, at San Jose and San Juan avenues. The Balboa ward is the newly adopted name of the old Daly City ward, the location of which has been changed to make it more central for the enlarged territory covered by the present ward. Bishop R. Vance Pearson is in charge of tthe affairs of the ward, with Thomas E. Ricks and E. L. Williams as his counsellors and George Simister as ward clerk. This ward has grown in membership from about one hundred to over three hundred in the short space of three years.

The Sunday school and primary conjoint session of the conference convened at 10 A. M., every class and age from infants in arms to veterans of over 70 years being represented in the various departments.

A fine program of recitations and musical and instumental numbers was rendered by various individual members of the Sunday school, as well as by the classes.

The chief speakers were State Superintendent of Sunday Schools John Soelberg, Ward Superintendent Ernest Bosketeer, Minnie A Hicken, Stake President of the Primary Association, and Irma Williams, Ward President of Primary Association. The evening session was held under the direction of the Stake Presidency, with Bishop Pearson conducting the exercises. Among the Stake authorities present were Stake President W. Aird McDonald and his second counsellor, Clyde W. Lindsay; Melvin A. Allred, Fred Hoeft and Professor Isaac B. Ball, of the Stake High Council; Ray T. Lindsay and Arthur W. Sadler, of tthe Young Men's Mutual; Mrs. Shurtleff and Mrs. Peterson, of the Relief Society Stake Board; and Mrs. Mahoney of the Young Ladies' Mututal Stake Board.

The meeting was a conjoint session of Relief Society and General Ward Conference. A splendid program was thoroughly enjoyed by a large and interested audience. Musical numbers were beautifully rendered by Beatrice Simister and Wallace Green, while the speakers included W. Aird MacDonald, Clyde W. Lindsay, I. B. Ball, Thos. E. Ricks, E. L. Williams, R. Vance Pearson, A. W. Sadler, Sister Shurtleff, Agnes H. Felsch, Sister Mahoney, Mary K. Uhlig and Floyd Bevan.

JEFFERSON LOSES LEAGUE CONTEST

A last minute touchdown gave South San Francisco a well earned 7 to 0 victory over Jefferson high school last Friday on the Boilermakers' field. These ancient rivals went into a tie for the "B" division leadership due to the upset.

With the exception of the score, which was reversed, this contest was almost an exact duplicate of the previous encounter between these elevens. Both teams played a hard-fighting defensive game, equal yardage was gained from scrimmage and the winner was decided in the last quarter.

South San Francisco's margin of victory was established in the last 30 seconds of play. The Boilermakers worked the ball from Jefferson's 16 yard line to within a foot of the final marker, where Questni, fullback, crashed through tackle on the fourth down to score.

Jefferson's chances for at least a tie game, which would have won them the championship, went with the strong wind that was blowing across the field. The Indians' passing attack that practically won every game was useless. The absence of SoRelle, star defense man, who was injured in the third quarter, hurt the team also.

The Indians play Balboa today on the local field. This contest should be another thrilling encounter.

CROCKER P. T. A. HAS INTERESTING MEETING

On Tuesday, October 14, Crocker Parent-Teachers' Association held its regular monthly meeting in their club rooms on Wellington avenue. Mrs. Julia V. Jordan, president, was in charge. A good attendance enjoyed the meeting and plans were furthered for the bazaar to be held in the near future. Mrs. Jordan reported on the publicity luncheon, held in the Benjamin Franklin Hotel in San Mateo, on October 2.

Mrs. Ethel Bolger, membership chairman, announced a membership drive to be held in November and December.

The regular afternoon whist will be held on Wednesday, October 22, in the club rooms on Wellington avenue. Mrs. Maynard Chesney is the chairlady in charge. All those who enjoy a pleasant, sociable game are invited to attend.

After the business meeting, Mr. William Savage, district superintendent of schools, gave a most helpful talk on mentally deficient children and the excellent work that Parent-Teacher organizations are doing along that line.

Little Miss Patricia O'Neil gave two quaint readings, after which Mrs. Orvilla Pauw, contralto, sang two selections in her usual charming manner.

After the program the meeting adjourned to partake of refreshments served by the hostesses, Mrs. Chesney, Mrs. Bolger and Mrs. Byrne.

LA HONDA COUPLE TAKEN TO PRISON

Sentenced to imprisonnment for life for the murder of Frank Roderick, La Honda rancher, Will Woodring was taken to San Quentin last Tuesday, and Mrs. Minnie Roderick, wife of the slain man, began her term in San Quentin on Wednesday.

A new trial for Mrs. Roderick and Woodring, convicted last week of the murder of Frank Roderick, was denied by Judge Buck last Saturday morning when the two defendants appeared before him for sentence. Mrs. Roderick and Woodring were convicted in Judge Buck's court the previous Monday after a trial which lasted for a week, and which was watched with interest throughout the state, due to the unusual features and brutality of the murder. In bringing in a verdict the jury recommended life imprisonment for both defendants.

Roderick was murdered on May 15 at his La Honda ranch, and his body was later found by Constable Grill, Sheriff James J. McGrath and deputies, buried in the bottom of an abandoned well not far from the Roderick ranch house. An invesigation disclosed that he had been shot through the head. All through the investigation each of the defendants maintained their own innocence and claimed that the rancher was murdered by the other.

Attorneys for both defendants have carried the case to the district court of appeals in an attempt to get a new trial.

Just before Mrs. Roderick was to leave for San Quentin, she was asked: "Do you want to leave any message before you begin your long stretch in prison?"

"You may say for me," Mrs. Roderick stated, "that I am going to San Quentin an innocent woman. I am guilty of no crime. It is apparent that my story was not believed, but some day the world will know that I told the truth; some day the sun will shine for me; some day Woodring will tell the true story. Until that, I guess I must grin and bear it."

Woodring maintained his innocence to the last, declaring when he was on his way to prison that he was not guilty of the crime of which he had been convicted.

IS WINDSHIELD WIPER WORKING PROPERLY?

With California's rainy season approaching, motorists are advised by the Division of Motor Vehicles to inspect windshield wipers to see if they are working properly.

This simple little device, it was declared, if out of adjustment, may mean the loss of one or more lives when a sudden storm finds the motorist with his view of the road obscured by raindrops.

"Try your windshield wiper out and see if it works before the rains start," said the division's bulletin. "The warm weather may have cracked the connecting hose or any number of other things may have happened to it during the summer. This simple precaution may save your life."

"While you are thinking about it, have your lights checked for glare and your brakes adjusted for wet driving. Keep a set of chains in the car for your trip to the mountains over icy roads."

Mrs. A. Welsh Entertains

On Thursday afternoon of last week a number of ladies were entertained at the home of Mrs. A. Welsh, on Theta avenue. Dutch whist was enjoyed, after which delicious refreshments were served. Mrs. Welsh was assisted by Mrs. Callsen. The hostess received a number of gifts from her friends. Among those present were Mesdames M. White, A. Smith, M. Rampie, H. Cliver, J. Headvall, C. Cochrane, D. Putney, B. Cinnamon, of Oakland, A. Romer, B. Downing, and K. Harris, of San Francisco.

Meeting of La Fiesta Club

The last meeting and social of La Fiesta Club was held at the home of Miss Collista Dalton, on Niantic avenue. After the meeting dainty refreshments were served to the following members: Laura Figone, Sylvia Fischer, Margie O'Connor, Louise Clemens, Nonie Healey, Lorraine Wall, Elsie Fahey, Julia Romer, Edna Boyle, Tessie O'Connor, and Christine Hume.

"JESUS" IS THEME OF LOCAL PASTOR

Continuing a series of discourses on incidents in the life of Jesus, the pastor of the Daly City Presbyterian church will preach Sunday evening on "His Infallible Wisdom in Embarassing Situations." The service begins at 7:45, at Hanover and Evergreen.

BOARD APPROVES NEW TAX MEASURE

San Mateo county supervisors last Monday endorsed proposition 18 on the November ballot, calling for the collection of personal taxes on automobiles at the time the registration plates were issued to the owner. The tax collection would be done by the Motor Vehicle department, and the money collected later apportioned among the counties entitled to the tax.

The measure met with unanimous approval when County Assessor Daniel Flynn aappeared before the board to urge approval of the proposition and ask for funds to support the campaign now being waged by county assessors on behalf of the measure.

Flynn explained to the board that more than 25 per cent of personal taxes on automobiles were not collected by the county, because of change of address or removal from the county, or, in many cases, downright refusal on the part of non-property owners to pay them. He estimated the county's loss each year at more than $25,000.

The assessor said the collection of the tax at the time registration plates were issued and contingent upon receiving the plates would save the county vast sums yearly and force automobile owners to pay the asessment.

San Francisco has appropriated $5,000 to aid the measure, and the San Mateo board laid the matter over a week until they can determine just how much money should be expended to help the proposition.

After approving claims and transacting routine business the board adjourned to meet next Monday.

BODY OF UNIDENTIFIED MAN DISCOVERED IN FLOWER BED

The body of an unidentified man was found Thursday, lying in a flower bed in the Home of Peace cemetery, Lawndale, the body being discovered by Marshal Joseph Cavali of Lawndale.

The body was taken to the Lasswell & Co. undertaking pariors, where Deputy Coroner Luella Pepper endeavored to trace the slight clues that might lead to the identification of the unfortunate man.

The man was well dressed and was about 40 years old. He weighed 140 pounds and was 5 feet 8 inches tall. He wore a blue-gray suit, with the trousers of a pattern slightly different from that of the coat.

A hotel key, number 208, and two laundry marks were the only clues to his identity. One mark, on his vest, was 663-5435-3; the other, on his collar, was L-10207. In his pockets were 19 cents, a cheap watch and a pencil bearing the letters "P. G. & E."

COLMA MAN INJURED IN FREAK ACCIDENT

Joe Parodi was riding in the rear of a Dodge truck driven by Ferro Barrotondro, of Colma, holding a wine press and crusher, when the driver turned north out of School street, Parodi being thrown out of the truck and the grape press falling on top of him. Parodi sustained a fractured right arm and injuries to the right side of his head. He was rushed to the South San Francisco hospital.

Dr. A. P. Campbell, of the U. S. Marine hospital at Fourteenth avenue and Lake street, San Francisco, was driving by at th time of the accident and rendered assistance.

COUNTY HAS DEBT OF $831,398

San Mateo county owes $831,398.56, according to figues released by the state controller. This, however, is a very moderate debt, the report shows, by comparison with some other counties in the state, and considering that the county has an assessed valuation of more than $72,000,000.

San Francisco leads the state in indebtedness with an outstanding obligation of more than $137,000,000. Los Angeles is second with more than $9,000,000; Alameda third with more than $4,000,000, and Fresno fourth with more than $3,000,000.

The total valuation of all counties is $10,203,866,630, while the total indebtedness is $188,866,324.

Attend L. D. S. Union Meeting

Mrs. Mabel Crossland, of Hillcrest Drive, and Miss Elizabeth Saame, of Santa Cruz avenue, were luncheon guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Felsch of Risel street last Sunday. After lunch the guests accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. George Felsch and daughter Miss Drusilla Felsch, motored to Oakland where they attended the L. D. S. Union meeting.

MISSIONARY SPEAKER AT CALVARY CHAPEL

On Sunday morning Calvary Baptist Chapel 5724 Mission street, will have as their guest speaker Mr. M. Vincent Young, who will speak to the children at the Sunday school hour and will occupy the pulpit at the morning service. Mr. Young has been a missionary for the past eight and a half years on the Burma-Chinese border, which has for years been a most exciting part as far as revolutions are concerned. He represents the second generation of missionaries; his mother and father having been missionaries in this particular field for the past 40 years. In this message he will relate his experiences among the fierce Lahu and Wa tribes, he himself having been surrounded by these head-hunters many times. The cosutmes of the Lahu and Wa tribes will be exhibited. Mr. and Mrs. Young will each be dressed in the dress of these peoples. Probably one of the most primitive instruments of these jungle people is their musical instrument called "Naw," which will be played by Mr. Young. Mr. Young's topic at the morning service will be: "God's Work Among Wild People."

At the evening service the Pastor of Calvary Chapel will speak on "The Christ of the Pioneer's Trail." Great is the work of the pioneer, for he makes a path where none ever trod before. He faces the dangers of the unknown and makes them known. He grapples with untried experiences and tames them for the use of men. He endures hardship in order that those who come after him may enjoy comfort. He is called the Pioneer.

We in this great new land have particular reason for honoring the pioneer spirit. Who better than we should know the value of his courageous ventures? Who more than we have seen the currents of empire flow along the trail that he blazed? Who more than we have tasted the sweet fruits of his bitter experiences? All honor to the Pioneer! It is in this light that the New Testament would have us think of Jesus Christ. He is indeed presented in the New Testament as the Pioneer of our religious life.

The B. Y. P. U.'s have also prepared some very interesting programs for the day. These societies meet at 7 P. M. each Sunday night.

At the Wednesday night's prayer meeting we will close the study of the Book of Galatians. This last hour on Galatians will include the 6th chapter and a brief summary of the book.

On Friday evening of November 7 the Chapel will experience an evening which has been called "Festival Night." An excellent program has been prepared including three reels of motion picture titled "The Pilgrims" which is most fitting to this Thanksgiving month. Refreshments of punch coffee and cake will be served. Booths of various descriptions will be held, among them a fancy work booth.

Rally Day has been set for November 9. On this day the entire Sunday School body will return their dime banks which offering will go towards the Chapel's missionary budget. The various departments will take part in this program. It is another big day planned at Calvary Chapel.

IN THE BEGINNING

Editor Daly City Record: I was very much impressed with the last week's article headed "In the Beginning." Truly the value of our churches cannot be overemphasized. I have often wondered whether or no Daly City was a "Religious Nickel" community! What a small amount to go towards the national standard of church support. The progress of any community is always generally the work of its God-fearing people. Yet there are thousands in our cities who never enter the doors of our churches. They feel no need of them and their belief beyond the grave is very doubtful. But they have not yet died! When man will not accept Christ during the period of his existence on this planet he will have to experience his mistake beyond the grave. Denying the laws of gravitation does not alter the fact that the law exists. A mere stopping off into space will readily change one's mind if time is left! Bob Ingersoll the atheist knew more about Hell a few minutes after death than probably he expected to. Man's denial of such a place does not remove its place of existence. Likewise man's denial of the importance of the church does not alter the fact that he is happier and safer because it exists in is neighborhood. Worth M. Tippy gives us probably one of the outstanding definitions of the church: "The Church is a religious home, a sanctuary for worship, a school for religious instruction, a fighting unit for the new world that is building. It is a social center of the hightest type, since it gathers into relations of mutual helpfulness people of every age and condition, and since it adds to the attractiveness of the ordinary club the power of religion and the generous sympathies of the altruistic impulse. The Church is the most broadening and catholic organization among men, since its vision is to the ends of the world whither the Gospel is being carried, and since its citizenship is in Heaven as well as in earth!" God help the community that ceases to recognize the value of its churches!

CHARLES WOESSNER,
Pastor Calvary Baptist Chapel.

OPPOSE PERMANENT REGISTRATION ACT

The initiative measure denominated as number 14 on the ballot would restore the so-called system of Permanent Registration of voters. California had "so-called Permanent Registration" from 1872 to 1899. After almost 30 years of experimenting with this system and endeavoring to make it workable, the people of California abolished Permanent Registration and enacted the present law calling for a new and complete registration for each general election.

Permanent Registration was found to be costly, impractical, inefficient and conducive to fraudulent voting.

Under the proposed system each registered voter who fails to vote at a regular election or who moves in the interim between elections is required to personally visit the County Clerk's or Registrar's office and reregister. The County Clerks and Registrars will strike from the Register the names of those who fail to vote and of those who move. Proponents of the measure fail to explain how they will check on persons moving from address to address or from precinct to precinct. Against the unsupported claims of economy for the proposed system, we contend that it will be more costly, both in time and money, to take the two and one-half million registered voters to the Registrar than to send the Registrar or deputies to the voters.

Under the present system the percentage of registered voters to population is high. Under so-called Permanent Registration the percentage of registered voters to population will materially decrease each year.

So-called Permanent Registration will have the effect of disenfranchising many of the working men and women of the state who, through necessity of employment, are compelled to change their places of abode from time to time.

So-called Permanent Registration has nowhere been found to be satisfactory, and the citizens of California cannot afford to return to the system which, after thirty years' use, was found to be a failure.

Every citizen who believs in the purity of elections and who believes that the opportunity to vote should be as free from restrictions as compatible with the sanctity of elections is asked to vote "NO" on initiative measure number 14.

Harry O. Van Hart, former assistant secretary of the Union Trust Company of Cleveland, says he is very much alive, although his death has been announced in a nationally known magazine.

Mary Jackson, a blind high school girls of Louisville, uses Braile textbooks and stands high in her studies.

THE NEW COSOLIDATION

Some months ago in an earlier page, we heard of "The New Co-operation." On another page of this issue of the Daly City Record is found a page on "Linking Town and Country." It might be termed an article on "The New Consolidation."

Consolidation is the trend of business today. Railroads, banks, oil companies, film producers, chain stores, every line of business is entering into consolidations. But the biggest consolidation which can take place, and which is rapidly coming about, is the consolidation between individual towns and their trade territories.

Earlier in the year we learned the statistics of "One in Ten" . . . but we also learned that here and there, thirty and forty miles apart rather than ten or twelve, are smaller towns which are growing. The same applies to larger cities with greater distances between. This leaves the SUCCESSFUL town a greater trade radius to include in its "consolidation." And the methods of bringing together this town and its trade radius are worthy of the consideration of each of us.

The bringing about of a closer relationship between this town and its territory will mean increased dividends in many ways to each of us. Increased dividends in new friendships as well as new business.

And the development of the six factors which control this great merger which we are all interested in putting through will bring us, in addition to the benefts of the merger itself, benefits in a richer, better home life in this community of ours.

This is not a "Your" community—not a "His" community—not a "My" community. It is an "OUR" community; and as such the more people included in that "Our" the better and greater community it will grow up to be. Every line of business, every walk of life, every man, woman and child is interested; this interest means GROWTH; and to grow we need more room, the room which will come with the Linking of the Town and Country in our New Consolidation.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

Francis H. Case, editor of the Hot Springs, S. D., Star, says:

That the greatest combination in the world is a man and an idea.

Without a man and an idea, boasted natural resources are nothing.

Waves that wireless used waved in vain until Marconi came. No one heard of Newton, Iowa, until a man conceived the Maytag washing machine. The Isthmus of Panama was a narrow strip of land connecting two continents until De Lesseps dreamed and Goethals made the dream come true. Rushmore was only a block of massive granite until Borglum saw his Great American Memorial figures there.

Matter is nothing; man is everything. Man and an idea. Mountains may hide millions in minerals but only man can bring them forth and give them value. Do not boast of the natural resources you have—boast of the men you breed! Worry not whether you have a hundred and one resources; worry whether you have one man of imagination and action in your midst.

And if you have a man in your community who has "ideas," stay with him and make it easy for him to stay with you.

MANY ARE NABBED AS PROHIBITION VIOLATORS

Violation of the Wright Act placed a number of names upon the jail register over the week-end. A series of raids by the sheriff's office and raids by the Menlo and Redwood City police were responsible for the arrests.

Those arrested by Sheriff McGrath and deputies from his office were: J. Danzi, 60, Menlo Park. Danzi was charged with possession of liquor and of a slot machine.

J. Mack, 39, Atherton, charged with possession of gin.

Mrs. Rose Coe, 28, housewife, charged with possession of liquor.

Scotty Doe, 42, Atherton, possession of two cases of beer.

Bob Kerr, 55, Menlo Park, possession of whiskey, beer, gin and a slot machine.

E. J. Macey, Beresford, possession of whiskey.

Alfred Peterson, Middlefield road, possession of liquor.

Tony Francisconi, Menlo Park, possession of liquor.

V. Franconi, Emereald Lake, possession of liquor. Franconi entered a plea of guilty and was fined $500 at the time by Judge McAuliffe. He paid the fine and was released.

The others appeared before Justice of the Peace Edward I. McAuliffe on Saturday and were given sentences of 100 in jail with the alternative of paying fines of $500. Three of those so sentenced chose jail terms. They are E. J. Macey, J. Mack and Rose Coe. Scotty Doe, Bob Kerr and Victor Franconi each paid fines of $500.

The wedding ceremony of Carl W. Gentry and Miss Florence Cox, of Elkin, N. C., was delayed half a day when a crow darted in their car, seized the key and departed.

SOMETHING NEW

An airplane with a horizontal revolving wing has been flown successfully in Europe without a pilot.

By means of a double scanner the new television equipment of W9XAP-WMAQ, Chicago, is able to switch from a group scene to closeups of several actors in a split second.

A machine which is operated by electricity has been developed which automatically separates eggs according to quality and weight and stamps the grade on each shell.

An instrument has been developed which determines the condition of the oil in the crank case of an automobile, and indicates when the oil should be changed.

The Fighting Tenderfoot

By Willaim MacLeod Raine

Copyright by William MacLeod Raine
WNU Service

The term, tenderfoot, was applied to every newcomer to the old West and stuck to him or left him according to the degree of his proficiency in assimilating the ways of the country. One essential process in his education was mastery of the use of firearms. If naturally "handy" with a six-gun, he outgrew the tenderfoot characteristics more rapidly than his less skillful brethren.

Faithful novelists, such as William MacLeod Raine, who have relied upon true types and authentic backgrounds have not minimized the influence of the six-gun as a civilizing element. The first resort of cowards and ruffians, it naturally became the most potent implement in combating and subduing them. No amount of courage or determination on the part of peace officers availed without the assistance and accomplished use of well-oiled "blue hardware." In many sections no man could be considered well dressed for either social or business occasions unless he wore it.

Most novels of the West have dealt with seasoned residents of the country—people equipped to take care of themselves under all circumstances. The heroes generally have been men inured to the life. It has remained for William MacLeod Raine to paint a stirring picture of the experiences of a tenderfoot; to draw a hero who was pitched into the midst of a trying environment and who had to learn to fight before he had comprehended any other of the elements of existence in the place of his location.

You will follow the romance of this story and the adventures of the fighting tenderfoot with rare interest; for they are mainly true records, accounts from historical sources and types of character in one of the most picturesque and colorful eras the world has ever known.

CHAPTER I

A Desert Greeting

On horse and man the evidence was written plain that they had traveled far. Yellow dust, fine as powder, had sifted into every crease of the rider's trousers. It covered his boots, his black hat, his coat. It streaked the young fellow's face and caked his burning throat. The eyes of the man were sunken and bloodshot. As for the animal, sweat stains blotted flank and withers. Hoofs dragged and head drooped.

Garrett O'Hara nodded in the saddle. The heat of the sun made him sleepy. No pressing engagement awaited him at Concho. Why not throw off among the trees and lie down in the shade for an hour? So, sleepily, he mused, hand on the horn to steady his lax body.

Out of the slumberous heat of the afternoon came sinister greeting. The traveler's hat, tilted to protect the face from the sun's rays, was lifted from his head as though by a sudden current of wind. The sound of an explosion boomed. From the chaparral smoke drifted skyward.

O'Hara's languor vanished—and so did he. Before the booming of the rifle had died, before the first thin shred of smoke had appeared, he had flung himself out of the saddle and was scuttling for the brush. As he ran he stooped to scoop up his hat.

Not till he had dodged past much greasewood and mesquite did he stop to reconnoiter. For one glance had shown him two holes in the hat. A bullet had passed through the side and crown. If the ambusher had fired two inches lower the lead would have crashed through the victim's brain.

The running man pulled up to consider ways and means. The position of the holes in the hat showed him that the shot had come from the right. What was the object of this attack? O'Hara was a stranger. He could have no enemies, not in this frontier land. Since he was unknown, nobody could have acquired a grudge against him. Robbery, then, could have been the only motive. Somebody had tried to assassinate him to get his wallet, or else his horse and saddle. Who? O'Hara meant to find out, if it could be done without too much risk.

Slowly, with the greatest precaution against the snapping of twigs or the rustle of bushes, he moved toward the road, revolver in hand. He stopped. Something or some one was moving rapidly in the brush parallel to him.

A voice, two voices, came abruptly from the left. The first, a rough, heavy one, startled by surprise: "You, by cripes!"

The other high and clear, on a note of excited resentment: "Who did you expect? Who were you trying to kill?"

"Why in Mexico do you ride around in them clothes?" The rough voice held both apology and exasperation.

"Suppose you mind your own business, Shep Sanderson," came swift, sharp answer. "What I want to know is why you shot at me?"

O'Hara, edging forward, could see them now from the cover of a cholla. They were in a draw. One, a light slender figure, stood against a bank, revolver in hand. The other, the big hulking man, carried a rifle.

The eavesdropper had a swift suspicion, which he verified by craning his neck around the cactus. The one who had spoken last was a young woman. She wore the shiny chaps of a cowboy, plain wide leathers into which she had thrust her skirts.

"I ain't admittin' I shot at you, but if I did I had no way of knowin' it was a woman, let alone you. You got no license to wear that get-up." There was outraged virtue in the heavy growl.

"You shoot first and find out afterward who you're shootin' at. Is that it? I'll see what Dave Ingram has got to say about that. If you want to know, you're nothing but a low-down murdering wolf."

"Now looky here, Miss Steelman, I didn't go for to shoot at you—if I did. I was aimin' at an antelope. I've done apologized. Cain't do anything more, can I?" he wheedled sulkily.

O'Hara slipped quietly forward and stepped down into the arroyo. The young woman saw him first. She stared at him, eyes wide with surprise. Her expression warned the big man. With unexpected swiftness he whirled, the rifle jumping to his hip.

"Who are you?" he demanded.

The answer came smoothly and easily: "I'm the antelope you shot at, Mr. Sanderson."

The big man glared at him. Shep Sanderson was that unusual combination, a slow thinker and a fast shooter. He had a one-track mind and had no room in his brain for simultaneous cross currents. Either Barbara Steelman or this man was wrong. He had fired only one shot. As his mind functioned he knew, with considerable relief, that it had been the stranger at whom he had flung the bullet from his rifle. The girl must have been in the brush between him and the road. What was she doing here, anyhow? And how did this man know his name was Sanderson? What was the best thing to do now?

O'Hara lifted the hat from his head with a bow to the young woman. She caught sight of the holes in it and her eyes dilated.

"Did he do that just now?" she asked.

"Just now, miss, with his little bullet."

She felt the blood ebb from her heart as she stared at him. Somehow, in the rush of the moment, she had not been afraid when she thought Sanderson had fired at her. There had not been time for fear. But now, with the evidence that red tragedy had grazed so near, stamped in the hat, she was shaken.

"Why did he do it?"

"That's what I've come to ask him." The manner of the young man altered. Brown eyes and voice were no longer gentle. In his bearing was a certain poised inflexibility. Yet he did not raise his voice or change his attitude. The difference was of the spirit. "Why pick on me as a target, Mr. Sanderson?"

"I don't know you, fellow," Sanderson growled.

"Which makes your greeting to me all the stranger. Did you mistake me for one of your friends? Or was it my purse you fancied?"

The girl was puzzled at this young man who had dropped down upon them from the sky, as it were. "Tenderfoot" was written all over him. Clothes, manner, bearing, personality, all spoke of the city rather than the range.

She spoke quickly. "You're not Judge Warner?" The statement was a question.

"No," he replied.

She turned on Sanderson, and her words almost leaped at him. "I know why you tried to kill this man. You thought he was Judge Warner."

Though he denied it in words, the man stood convicted. There was confession in the blank, amazed look he turned on her.

"Why, I—I— Nothin' to that," he stammered. "I done told you I shot at an antelope."

"Who is paying you for this?" she cried. "Who hired you to do murder to prevent Judge Warner holdin' court tomorrow?"

Sharply she had flung out her questions, but O'Hara noticed that the assurance had died out of her before she finished speaking. Some thought had occurred to her that filled her with fear.

"Can't Do Anything More, Can I?" He Wheedled Sulkily.

"Tell you I shot at an antelope," the fellow insisted, shifting his feet uneasily.

"A trained antelope, one riding a horse," suggested O'Hara.

Sanderson turned sullenly a shifty eye to him. "Stranger man, you better fork yore fuzzy an' light out."

"Or you'll send another blue whistler at me," the young man said, brown eyes gleaming.

The girl spoke. She did not care to see the issue pressed too far. Sanderson had a bad reputation. "Talkin' about his horse, Shep, where is it? You'd better round it up for him."

"Me?" The big man glared at O'Hara. "I ain't been hired to wrangle for no tenderfoot."

"Don't you think, since it was your fault his horse got away, it would be decent to—?"

"For this hombre? Me? Say, I'm Shep Sanderson."

This seemed to be answer enough. His cold shallow eyes, light as skim milk, slid from O'Hara to Miss Steelman and back again. He moved away, his face toward the younger man, till he reached a dense clump of prickly pear. Behind this he vanished.

The girl spoke, "First off, we better get our horses."

They found hers where she had left it when she slipped from the saddle to take refuge in the brush.

"We'll look for yours," she said, busying herself with a stirrup. She was disturbed that he should find her wearing leathers, using a man's saddle. She wanted to explain to him that in such thorny chaparral one had to wear leathers to protect the clothes and flesh against cruel clutching spikes, that she was no crazy tomboy who raced around the country dressed up like a man. But any approach to the subject was embarrassing.

"We want to be careful," the young woman said in a low voice. "He's a bad crowd, Shep Sanderson is. . . . Which way did your horse go?"

They had reached the road. "There it is, back of that prickly pear," O'Hara said. "I knew it wouldn't wander far. Too tired."

He reclaimed his horse and swung to the saddle.

"This way," said Miss Steelman, and swung her mount deeper into the chaparral.

For nearly half a mile she led the man silently in and out among the brush. Then she reined up to ride beside him.

Disapprovingly, she looked at his fancy boots. "They'll be ruined in all this cactus," she told him. "You have to wear leathers in this country. It's not a question of how you look."

He understood that this was not so much a criticism of him as a defense of herself.

"Yes, miss. I can see it's better," he agreed. "But I was expecting to stick to the road when I started."

"Started where from?"

"From Aurora."

"For Concho?"

"Yes, miss."

She was still puzzled to place him. Though in the mountains, Concho was in the heart of a cattle country. There men talked cows, worked them, lived them. It was the basic occupation upon which all others were dependent. It was an easy guess that this stranger had never ridden out the stampede of a trail herd. Yes, tenderfoot was sure enough the word for him.

She had a feeling that he was headed for trouble quite unconsciously and that he was poorly equipped to meet it. The combination of ignorance and courage is not a good one, not in a hard country like this into which he was riding.

He volunteered information timidly. "My name is Garrett O'Hara. I am a lawyer."

"A lawyer! Oh, you're going to Concho as one of Judge Warner's party."

"I'm going to live there."

She drew up her horse and looked at him in surprise. "Live there! What are you going to do?"

"Practice law."

"In Concho." A mouthful of white teeth flashed in laughter.

"Don't you think I'd make a good lawyer?" he asked, too shy to let her comment pass unanswered.

"I don't know. But why Concho? Who wants a lawyer there?"

"Prosperous town, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"Then there must be business there—cattle, contracts, real estate, lands."

Abruptly she asked: "Who do you know there? Who sent for you? Whose man are you?"

It was the last query that snagged his attention.

"What do you mean, whose man am I?"

She did not answer that. Her reply was wholly unexpected. "Better turn round and ride back to Aurora tomorrow."

His eyes flashed interest, and something more than that. "Why, if the court please?"

"It's not your kind of a country," she said.

"What kind of a country it is, where men shoot at strangers because they may be law officers?"

She flushed. "It's a good enough country, of its own kind. That Shep Sanderson is a low-down killer. You can't judge folks by him."

"I hope not, though I think you suggested that some one hired him."

"I don't know whether anyone did or not," she responded, and he noticed that at the thought her face clouded again.

Her next remark seemed to bear no relation to what had gone before.

"Do you know Dave Ingram? Or my father, Wesley Steelman?"

"No, miss."

Apparently she was a young person of abrupt transitions. "That hogleg you carry! Can you use it?"

"Hogleg?"

"Six-shooter," she said impatiently. "Do you carry it for show?"

"Mostly," he admitted. "I killed a rattlesnake with it today."

"Can you shoot?"

"I can hit a barn if I am near enough."

"Could you hit a man who was firing at you?"

"Don't think so. I'd hate to try."

"Then don't carry it. You'll be a shinin' mark for some one to bump you off."

"Do what to me?"

"Shoot you. I'd throw it away and play I was a preacher while I stayed at Concho. You'll be safe then. The town is full of hard men, quick on the shoot. That's how they settle difficulties."

"I'd say what Concho needed was law," he said drily.

"Don't you understand?" she cried. "Men make their own law. They carry it in a holster by their side. Just now trouble is brewing—a lot of it. There's a feud on. Among such men a lawyer's arguments wouldn't last a minute. Go back where you came from."

He shook his head. "I'm headed for Concho, miss."

She threw up a hand with a gesture that waved aside responsibility. "All right. It's none of my business, anyhow. I'm interferin' where I shouldn't."

"I'm sorry you want to hand me my hat before I've really started to call on your country," he said.

"Anwhow, look the ground over before you decide to stay. Talk with Steve Worrall. Say I sent you. He's in the freight business. You'll find him at the Longhorn corral."

"I'll do that," he promised.

"Steve has a lot of horse sense, and you can trust him."

They had left the road and swung to the right. At the summit of a long climb Miss Steelman drew up her horse.

"Our ways part here," she said. "Take that trail to the left. It's about five miles to town. When you come to a creek go right through it. That's Squaw Crossing. You can't miss the road."

He hesitated, trying to find words to thank her for her kindness. He knew the color was driving into his face, the effect of shyness. A quotation from "Fane Shore" came to his mind, and he blurted it out:

. . . Your bounty is beyond my speaking,
But though my mouth be dumb, my heart shall thank you.

She flashed a quick look at him, gave a short laugh, and took the hill trail.

Why had she made so much of warning him against staying at Concho? What was this mystery at which she hinted, one which made it unsafe for him, an insignificant stranger, to practice his profession in the town? No doubt he would find out soon enough.

A steep trail dropped like a crooked rope down the mountain side to a village which nestled at its foot. As he descended he could see that Concho had one business street. From it, up draws and hollows, two or three winding roads started tentatively toward the adobe houses that formed the residence section.

O'Hara drew up in front of the Concho house and tied his sorrel to a snubbing post. With saddlebags over his arm the young man mounted the porch steps and walked into the adobe hotel.

Three or four men were seated in the office, chairs comfortably tilted back. One of them was talking, his heels resting on a drum stove that had not been lit for many months. He continued to talk. Neither he nor any of the others paid the least attention to the entrance of the stranger.

"Is the proprietor in?" O'Hara asked.

"I run this shebang."

"Can I get a room?"

"I reckon you can get a cot somewheres."

"Would you mind showing me where it is? I'd like to wash."

"Go down that passage an' turn to the right. There's four beds in the second room. You can roost in one of them unless some guy squawks an' claims it's his. Wash basin back o' the house." His duties as host concluded, he returned to unfinished business.

O'Hara headed down the long hall toward the bedroom of which he was to be part occupant. Upon one of the cots he dropped the saddlebags, after dusting them with a gunny sack which he found in one corner of the room. Back of the house he found a well, a tin wash basin, and a dirty towel. He finished washing just in time to answer the supper bell.

It was characteristic of Garrett O'Hara that he did not call at once on Steve Worrall at the Longhorn corral. He wanted first to get his own impressions of the town. As much as he had seen of the place fascinated him. It was raw and crude, but the yeast of young and exuberant life worked in it. If it had not been wild and untamed he would have been disappointed.

He wandered up the street and his haphazard footsteps took him toward a sound of music. A Mexican baile was in progress. He paid the price of admission and stepped inside. A lithe, bright-eyed girl was doing a fandango with a young fellow in Spanish costume. O'Hara watched the scene eagerly. This was the sort of thing he had come West to see. It had color, the charm of the unusual.

There came a disturbance at the door, disputing voices, an irruption of men, not Mexicans. There were four of them, and at the head of the group one whom O'Hara at once recognized, the fellow whom he had met that afternoon, Shep Sanderson. They were intoxicated, primed for trouble. The Mexicans drew back, scowling at them.

O'Hara took one quick look around the room. There was no way out except by the front door unless he climbed through a window. His revolver was at the hotel in his saddlebags. He grinned, a foolish little smile. Probably he was in for a very unpleasant experience, to put the case mildly.

As yet Sanderson had not seen him. The fellow had seized hold of a girl and was dancing with her much against her will. The natives shouted protests and muttered oaths of anger, but they were not prepared for active resistance.

The music stopped when Sanderson was close to O'Hara. The big man did not trouble to see that his partner reached her seat. He dropped her at once from his mind.

"Feed me a cigarette, fellow," he ordered, and then noticed to whom he was talking. "By cripes, it's the tenderfoot."

O'Hara felt his blood quicken. Danger always had that effect upon him.

"At your service," he replied.

"Who invited you to this tendejon?" the man demanded.

Siamese Fighting Fish Put Up Hot Contests

Meet Mr. Wat Chant Aiur Bopiter, two inches of forked and flailing lightning, famed fighting minnow of Siam. This ferocious though diminutive fish lay immersed in a bowl in the New York aquarium, the object of admiration of a huge crowd, according to a report in Time, the Newsmagazine.

In Siam, fish fighting occupies much the same place that cock fighting once did in the United States. In each of Bangkok's ten halls there are several tables about which are grouped seats for spectators. When the audience is ready, two bowls, each containing a contestant, are placed on the table. A fight is guaranteed if they charge at one another and pump their noses on the intervening glass. The betting commissioner books bets, the limit being $44. The two fish are then dumped into one big bowl together. They charge furiously, first ripping off each other's ruby-red ventral fins. Next to go is the red top fin, while frequently they bite off chunks of side meat, drawing blood. With good fish a fight will last for six hours. Unpedigreed ones are exhausted in 15 minutes. After a fish has lost a battle he is bred no more but spends his declining days training small fry. Trainer fish constantly have their bodies mutilated as do United States fisticuff trainers. Their advantage over the United States equivalents: they can regenerate broken parts.

Famous Police Quarters

Scotland Yard in London derives its name from the palace, which from the time of Edgar to Henry II, was assigned for the residence of Scottish kings whenever they visited that city. Scotland Yard in London is the headquarters of the Metropolitan police force. The first police office was located in Whitehall in Scotland Yard and from there removed in the autumn of 1890 to the new building on the Thames embankment, now known as New Scotland Yard, in which all the branches of the Metropolitan police force, including the famous criminal investigation department, are located.

Iodine Human Need

Observation has shown that occasional visits to the seashore render people practically immune from goitre. Sea spray blown inland iodizes the soil, the plants, and to some extent the air. Marine foods, such as oysters and fish, contain iodine in useful quantities.

California is now devoting $450,000 in State and $32,552 in Federal funds yearly to this humanitarian work.

The 1931 motor vehicle license plates will be the reverse in color of those now in use, according to announcement of the State Division of Highways. Orange letters and numerals will appear on a black background as in 1929. No other changes will be made with the exception of elimination of dashes between numerals and letters. The plates will be manufactured of the same twenty-four gauge steel, thirteen and seven-eighths inches long and six and one-eighth inches wide. The division announced that the combination of letters and numerals now in use permits a maximum of 2,070,000 plates of not more than six characters.

Proposal of the Southern Pacific Railroad to boost freight rates from 42½ to 67 cents per hundredweight on certain commodities will be battled by the Ventura Chamber of Commerce if any local shippers are affected. John Lagomarsino, president of the Ventura chamber, declared for this policy when he was informed of the railroad company's plans. Cities with water-shipping facilities are exempted in the application of the Southern Pacific for higher rates. While Ventura exports millions of barrels of oil and receives large cargoes of lumber by sea, the fact that it has very little water commerce of any other sort, may cause it to be subject to the railroad charge increase. Rates on beans, sugar citrus and oil are not affected in the request for the proposed change in schedule, as these are determined by either terminal or commodity-rate rulings.

Charged with failure to place deer tags on their two bucks, Vernon A. Look and Charles W. Miller pleaded guilty before Justice of the Peace Frank E. Niskey and were fined $75 apiece. Game wardens made the arrests on Rainbow Ridge.

Award of eight contracts totaling $1,085,260 for immediate construction of the new Los Angeles State building was announced by the State department of public works. All the contracts were awarded to Los Angeles firms.

NONE TOO OLD TO LEARN

Often one hears an uneducated man bewail his lot, complaining that he never had a chance to acquire an education. Usually such a man is one who actually labors not more than eight hours a day. He overlooks the fact that he could easily devote three or four hours daily to profitable reading and study, whereby he might overcome the handicap of which he complains.

Too many get the idea that unless they acquire an education in early life they must remain in ignorance. No greater mistake can be made. It is not when one begins to learn, but when one stops, that counts.

The trouble with the man or woman who goes through life in ignorance is usually nothing but sheer laziness. Think of Lincoln, getting his education at night from borrowed books, studied by the light from a fireplace. Or of Andrew Johnson, who only learned to write after he was married, an received an elementary education through his wife's instruction. Yet both rose to the office of President of the United States.

How great the opportunities of even the humblest today, in comparison with those of Lincoln and Jahnson. Books, magazines and newspapers are within the reach of all. Machinery has given everyone greater leisure for self-improvement, if such is really desired.

No one need remain uneducated unless he deliberately chooses to remain so.

Census reports show that 20 per cent of women are between the ages of 15 and 25. And the other 80 per cent dress as if they were.

FIRE LOSSES WHICH CANNOT BE MEASURED

Americans are accustomed to hear of our gigantic fire losses in terms of the money and lives lost—about five hundred million dollars and ten thousand lives being reported annually by the National Board of Fire Underwriters. But there is another phase of fire loss people often overlook, which is felt keenly by those affected. Fire many times destroys documents and records. An example was the destruction of the building containing the Federal Trade Commission's headquarters. The authorities state the valuable records destroyed cannot be replaced.

Oftentimes when a business suffers destruction by fire, vital records, without which the industry cannot function properly, are destroyed. It is not difficult to imagine what happens to a company when its accounts receivable are lost in this way. Even in fires in dwellings important documents are sometimes destroyed, as well as possessions and antique furniture upon which no value can be placed. Some heirlooms have been treasured from generation to generation. The loss is thus immeasurable.

Yet preventable fires are permitted year after year, and neither the enormous value nor the inconvenience of destroyed records seem to strike home to Americans who seem to think that it will always be the "other fellow" who will suffer the loss.

HERO IN A HOLE

There are heroes of the depths as well as of the heights. Bill Shrout, a Colorado oil driller, is one of them.

When a bit was lost in the hole of an oil well being drilled near Branson, and after all sorts of tools had been used in vain attempts to fish it out, Bill offered to go down the hole and make an effort to hook a line on the bit, which was 126 feet below the surface.

At first the officials of the company refused to permit him to take the risk, but finally agreed. Bill went down the 24-inch hole standing on a soft rope sling. The hole was caving badly and there was soft mud at the bottom, under which the bit was buried. After working for 30 minutes, during which he several times put his head under the watery mud, he succeeded in getting two half-hitches with a log-chain around the refractory bit. He signalled to come up and the bit shortly was drawn out without any further trouble.

This was the first time, so fas as known, that a man has ever gone to such a depth in an oil well in that region, where even at shallow depths gas ordinarily would be intolerable. In taking such a risk of being buried alive by the mud and rock of a caving well, Bill Shrout added his name to the long list of every-day heroes, who perform their deeds of daring as a part of the day's work.

NATURE'S SECRETS

Patient toilers in laboratories and elsewhere have wrested from Mother Nature many of her valuable secrets, but many others remain hidden from them, and may always remain so.

While an amazing number of synthetic products have been developed which even surpass the natural ones for which they serve as substitutes, there are countless other instances in which nature's handiwork can not be approached, much less improved upon.

And even among natural products there is a wide difference in quality for which it is difficult to account. What, for example, is the secret of the superiority of Kimberly diamonds; of South Sea pearls? Or, in the vegetable kingdom, what can explain the peculiar excellence of Kentucky blue grass and the grapes of France? Who can tell why Pennsylvania crude oil has a paraffin base, making it especially desirable as a lubricant? How explain the virtues of certain natural mineral waters?

These and a multitude of similar questions have so far baffled the scientific world, and proved that nature at its best is beyond the power of man to equal.

As some one has suggested, if all of nature's secrets could be discovered, psychologists of the future might make synthetic saints of all of us.

COOL HEAD SAVED LIFE

Presence of mind and a knowledge of what to do in an emergency often avert disaster, as was illustrated by the wife of a British official in India not long ago.

Seated at dinner with her family and several guests, she felt a snake coil about her ankle. Instead of shrieking with terror and attempting to flee, she quietly told those at the table not to move, and directed a servant to place a bowl of milk on the floor.

Presently a large cobra glided gracefully from under the table and approached the milk, which is said to be for this reptile an irresistible bait, and it was then killed by one of the men present.

The cobra is one of the deadliest snakes in the world, and while it does not attack people unless irritated, it is responsible for about 10,000 deaths each year in India alone. No antidote for cobra poison is known, and death usually results in a few minutes after the victim is bitten.

The lady in question knew the habits of the cobra, and had the self-control to do just what was necessary to save herself from certain death. Whether she would have exhibited the same composure had the intruder been a mouse is another question.

Gloria Swanson says of her husband, "Apart we have always been good friends." She seems to have solved the problem of how to be happy though married.

A psychologist declares that women are happier than men. At least they seem to enjoy their unhappiness more.

THIRTY-SIX THOUSAND LIVES

The United States is on its way toward establishing a new high record for deaths due to the automoblie, according to a well known authority. It is forecast that at the end of 1930 the total of casualties will be 36,000—several thousand more than were killed last year, when the present tragic record was established.

Recklessness and carelessness are still the modern "rules of the road." Hundreds of thousands of incompetents are allowed full use of the public highways.

This largest factor—that of incompetence—is probably largely responsible for our gigantic record of fatalities. Only a few states have laws requiring strict examination of applicants for driver's licenses. Fortunately there is a trend toward such laws throughout the nation and when every state has and enforces them, at least partial success in accident prevention will be achieved.

Another crying need, in most states, is for modernization and revision of traffic ordinances. Up to date, enforceable codes that would be supported by the public are essential to highway safety.

We have no more serious problem than that of automobile accident prevention. It affects every citizen and is a vital element in the life of every community.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN WORKERS

Of far reaching social and economic significance is the recommendation of the Cotton Textile Institute that night work for women and children in cotton mills be eliminated by March next. But why not dispense with woman and child labor in that industry?

For many years night work and long hours for these classes of workers has been a reproach to the textile industry, which has claimed extenuating circumstances due to the fierceness of competition. This competition has existed not only among domestic cotton manufacturers themselves, but with foreign mills and with other textile products.

Consideration of the problem by leaders of the cotton textile industry seems to have convinced them that whatever the economic facts may be, the time has arrived for the eliminating of night work for women and children.

We wonder what would happen to a reporter who permitted bandits to escape in any except a high-powered car.

COLMA BOYS' CLUB TO ENTERTAIN SATURDAY

Parents and friends of the Colma Boys' Club will turn out en masse Saturday evening, October 18, to watch their talented youngsters perform unusual and interesting stunts. The affair will be staged at the Colombo Auditorium. The curtain will rise at 8:15.

Paul Laning, featured entertainer and whistler over several local radio stations, will, no doubt, elicit many a laugh with his clever imitations. James Leary, "A Ton of Fun," star of many musical shows, has a bag of tricks and gags for the occasion. The O'Keefe Brothers will offer a versatile act of music and song, and Dave Corsiglia, prominent Colma accordionist, has arranged a brand new medley of popular songs for his share of the program. Aside from these attractions there will be many others. Following the vaudeville show there will be a dance.

Babe Ruth retains the home run record for the two major leagues, 60 in a single season, made in 1927. Hack Wilson of the Cubs led this season with 56. Ruths' home run record for the last twelve years is as follows: 1919, 29; 1920, 54; 1921, 59; 1922, 35; 1923, 41; 1924, 46; 1925, 25; 1926, 47; 1927, 60; 1928, 52, 1929, 46; 1930, 49.

The practical joker who periodically sells the Statue of Liberty, the Chrysler building and other objects of art to unsophisticated customers, recently sold historic Plymouth Rock to a New York dealer in antiques. The buyer sent a truckman to remove his latest treasure, but when a derrick was being rigged for the removal a policeman intervened and called a halt to the proceedings.

Linking Town and Country

IN ADDITION to serving the needs of our immediate community we should think in terms of our Greater Community. Our City Limits should not be the limit of our sphere of influence. One task we face today—and one of greatest importance—is the forging of a stronger link between town and country.

The first automobile had but a single cylinder. While it served its purpose after a fashion, two decades ago, progress scrapped the one-cylinder car as unsuitable for present day conditions. This is the age of multicylinder automobiles. The community that fails to cultivate actively and constantly widen its sphere of influence by a closer association of town and country has adopted one-cylinder practices in a multicylinder age.

The six cylinders that give the motive power necessary to the development of greater community relations are:

1. The development of business relations—Creation of a desire among our neighbors to seek the necessities, pleasures and conveniences of daily life here.
2. Development of better transportation and communication—Good roads, telephone, railway and bus, mail, radio, newspaper and all other contact mediums.
3. Development of better schools—Seeing that subjects are included in our school courses that meet the needs of the children in our surrounding territory, and that we maintain a high school standing.
4. Development of culture—Through library activities, lecture courses and other means of development.
5. Development of churches—Supplying the Greater Community with greater spiritual riches.
6. Development of general sociability—Increasing neighborliness, providing amusements and facilities for entertaining the Greater Community.

By hitting on all six cylinders our town can double in growth and prosperity through the active cultivation of the Greater Community.

Our growth is not measured by population alone nor prosperity merely in dollars and cents. but by the number and variety of human relationships.

Fellow citizens, let's each of us strengthen the link welding our Greater Community to

FOR HUMANITY'S SAKE

That men of affairs are becoming more and more interested in altruistic enterprises is amply evidenced by the humanitarian programs of many organizations composed principally of business men.

A case in point is the anti-tuberculosis campaign which has been made the principal activity of Civitan International. Through this movement Civitan clubs throughout the coutry are lending valuable assistance in co-operation with other agencies established to combat "the great white plague."

This campaign, in which every club is expected to take an active part, includes an educational effort against tuberculosis through the dissemination of information concerning its cause, prevention and treatment, in which the press, motion pictures, addresses in schools, home talent plays, posters and the distribution of pamphlets are employed.

Special attention is given to undernourished children, the establishment of summer camps, provision for physical examinations, and other measures sponsored by national and state tuberculosis associations.

The activities of the Civitan Clubs, and other similar organizations, in these matters prove that while successful business men may often be classified as hard-headed, they are not necessarily hard-hearted. They are generally willing to perform their full duty in behalf of suffering humanity.

NEW YORK SCYSCRAPERS

Higher and higher go the great skyscrapers of New York City, the new Empire building being destined to reach an eminence exceding Eiffel tower's 1,000 feet.

Observing the piling up of these massive buildings, some have wondered whether eventually Manhattan Island might not give way under the strain and collapse into the surrounding waters.

No such happening is likely, engineers point out, for two reasons. First, the city is built upon solid rock which would bear any weight man could ever put on it. Second, the great amount of stone removed in excavations for these great buildings is heavier than the completed skyscraper, although of apparently much less bulk.

Citing a recent example, the stone excavated for the new Chrysler building weighed twice as much as the building itself, which at present is the highest in the world. So, the weight supported by the island is becoming less instead of greater.

Folks may be reassured, then, that whatever may be the dangers of New York, the collapse of its foundations is not one of them.

Mrs. Will Rogers says her husband is never funny around home. Which may mean that Will is afraid to get funny with the Mrs. or that she has a poor sense of humor.

Several Senators complain of snooping in their offices. Well, the Senate has done much to encourage the habit.

Chicago is to have a great world's fair symphony band. Probably composed exclusively of wind instruments.

WESTERN PACIFIC SUBMITS ITS BRIEF

The final brief in the cases involving the plan of the Western Pacific California Railroad Company to serve San Francisco and the San Francisco Peninsula by a direct all-rail route by means of the construction of 39 miles of railroad between its main line at Niles, via Redwood City, and its San Francisco terminals, has been forwarded by the Western Pacific to the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, D. C.

The brief is in reply to exceptions made by the Southern Pacific to the report made by O. D. Weed, Interstate Commerce Commission examiner, who recommended that the Interstate Commerce Commission authorize the Western Pacific to proceed with the construction and operation of the proposed line. The next step in the case will be the oral argument before the Interstate Commerce Commission. An early decision is requested.

The principal purposes of the new line, says the Western Pacific in the brief, can not better be stated than in the words of the Interstate Commerce Commission examiner, which are quoted as follows:

"The objects to be attianed by the construction of the proposed line, as stated by the applicants, are to improve the service of the Western Pacific in San Francisco and adjacent areas in San Mateo county, particularly in connection with the stockyard and packing houses in South San Francisco, to extend the Western Pacific rails into the San Francisco peninsula, which is believed to be suitable for industrial development on an extensive scale, to strengthen the Western Pacific system by giving it more effective access to sources of traffic and thereby enable it to become a more completely self-contained and self-supporting instrument of transportation.

"It would provide the shippers of San Francisco depedent upon the Western Pacific with more effective and expeditious service, and it would give all shippers and receivers of freight on the penisula the advantages of increased effective competition."

Asserting that the proposed line is justified because of improved service to be afforded thereby, the Western Pacific says:

"The record clearly shows that under existing conditions the Western Pacific, dependent upon barge connection between its main line and its San Francisco terminals for the hadling of over 20 per cent of its entire traffic, is severely handicapped in competition with the Southern Pacific, which enjoys direct rail access to San Francisco.

"We submit that the Western Pacific is entitled to construct what is in effect a cut-off or bridge for the purpose of more expeditiously, economically, and efficiently handling its existing traffic to the principal city served by it, the principal port on the Pacific coast and the source of over 20 per cent of its entire traffic. This would justify the new line if no other benefit whatever were to be derived therefrom.

"San Francisco is the largest city served by the Western Pacific, and is not only the principal port on the Pacific Coast, but one the principal cities of the country. It enjoys the direct rail access of but a single line, the Southern Pacific. It is entitled to the benefit of the proposed improvement, and the Western Pacific, as an existing line serving that community, is entitled to effect that improvement in the manner here proposed."

It is pointed out that the Western Pacific, by the construction of the line of railroad between Niles and San Francisco, via Redwood City, proposes to bridge a gap which occurs right at its principal terminal. On this point the brief says:

"A similar gap existed at Carquinez Straits, about 30 miles away, on the Southern Pacific, the bridging of which was authorized. It has been announced that this bridge will be in operation about November 1. It was constructed to save two hours in the time required for transportation of Southern Pacific freight traffic. The estimated cost, as stated in the report, was $12,000,000. It is simply and solely a bridge with no traffic possibilities whatever.

"The present line, considered as a bridge alone, is estimated to cost $8,000,000, two-thirds of the amount expended by the Southern Pacific. It will accomplish a saving of from five to eight hours, three or four times as great as that accomplished by the Southern Pacific.

"The new investment could be cut in half by joint use of the existing Dumbarton bridge of the Southern Pacific, recommended by the examiner, and which the appelant (Western Pacific) is willing to take if offered on reasonable terms.

"In addition the Western Pacific will be enabled to serve a large potential area now wholly without service, to expand its facilities in the principal city reached by its lines, and by placing its service on a parity with its competitor obtain a more nearly equal share of the available traffic, for the handling of which it was designed and is so well adapted."

In regard to the industrial development that will come about through the new line, the Western Pacific says:

"The opportunity for the Western Pacific, afforded by the new line, to locate industries upon its own railroad is therefore of great importance to it and to the public which it serves. In referring to the area traversed by the new line the city engineer of San Francisco testified: 'This southeast portion of the city has been standing still for 30 years; there has been no development of any kind; and we want some new blood in there.'

"San Mateo county is a suburban area of San Francisco. It has been retarded in its industrial growth. The available land in San Francisco proper, apart from the areas to be opened by the new line, is almost fully utilized. It is not for the Southern Pacific to say that San Mateo county should have no opportunity to develop so long as the rest of the shores of San Francisco bay remain available.

"San Mateo county is entitled to develop its water frontage to balance the growth of suburban residences with industrial development and the proposed line will afford it the opportunity so to do by providing direct rail service to the industrial area, and competitive rail service to the entire community, neither of which now exists."

PAULINE FREDERICK COMING BACK IN "THE CRIMSON HOUR"

The extraordinary interest manifested by theatre-goers in the recent appearances of Pauline Frederick in her stirring drama, "The Crimson Hour," has prompted Belasco and Curran, the producers, to bring the popular star back to San Francisco for a special two weeks engagement at the Curran Theatre, San Francisco, beginning Monday night, October 20.

Though always a favorite in the Bay region, Miss Frederick completely captivated her legion of admirers in her latest vehicle. Seldom has the star been seen to better advantage, and all reports agree that the play itself registered a decidedly favorable impression. The reception accorded the attraction brought about Miss Frederick's decision to appear in "The Crimson Hour" n the East. Her fortnight's stay at the Curran following the engagement of "Young Sinners" is in the nature of a farewell appearance on the Pacific coast prior to her Eastern tour and a projected trip to London.

In the distinguished star's support will be seen the same cast, including Huntly Gordon in the featured role of the district attorney.

"THE BIRD OF FLAME" COMING TO THE GEARY, OCTOBER 20

All of the seductive lure and enticing languor of the tropics is said to have been woven deftly into the sensational South Sea drama, "The Bird of Flame," in which Dorothy Burgess, brilliant personality of stage and screen, will be seen as the star at the Geary Theatre, San Francsco, beginning Monday night, October 20.

The alluring Miss Burgess was last seen in San Francisco as the dusky hell-cat, Lulu Belle, in the famous play of that name. Movie fans will recall her as the gayly deceptive half-caste in "In Old Arizona."

"The Bird of Flame" is a colorful and picturesque piece that gives Miss Burgess the character of a native dancing girl of unusual charm and grace. She falls in love with a young white man, Bob Holden, who is wrecking himself with drink. Under the spell of her charm, he takes a new interest in life, and is about to claim her for his wife when his old sweetheart appears. These two women, products of distinctly different and widely separated environments, battle desperately for the man they love.

The thrilling drama is from the pens of John B. Hymer, co-author of The Crimson Hour," and LeRoy Clemens. It is being presented by Belasco and Curran, and the staging is under the direction of A. H. Van Buren. An excellent cast of more than forty is promised, many of whom are natives of the tropical isles of the South Pacific.

"Stereotype" is a new name for a mental disorder which impels its victims to do or say the same thing over and over again. For example, one patient wrote a single word 2,560 times without stopping; another shuffled a pack of cards continuously during his waking hours for eighteen weeks. Much of the argument one hears concerning the tariff, prohibition and Muscle Shoals might easily be the result of "stereotype."

When police entered to search the home of Mrs. Galli, of Denver, she sat down quickly and refused to budge. Finally she was forcibly removed from her seat, which was found to be a whisky still that she had temporarily concealed beneath her skirts.

For completeness and finality it would be hard to beat a report recently made to a mercantile agency regarding the credit standing of a merchant. The reporting correspondent wrote: "Credit O. K. Has been out of business some time. Also dead."

PRESIDENT BUT NO PAY

Latest of J. P. Morgan partners to give up lucrative business for unremunerative public service is Thomas S. Gates, who has resigned from the Morgan firm to become president of the University of Pennsylvania, without pay. In doing this Mr. Gates is putting into practice an idea expressed in an interview some time ago, in which he said: "I am interested in problems rather than in rewards. I don't care much about accumulating anything, but I am intensely interested in the constructive side of human relationships."

Born in 1837, Mr. Gates was admitted to the bar in 1896, his first work in a law office being performed, it is said, at a salary of $25 a month. He later drifted into banking, almost, as he says, "without knowing it." His advancement was rapid and he became president of a big trust company, a Drexel partner, and finally a Morgan partner in 1921, with chairmanships and directorships in many corporations, including banks, utilities, locomotive works and what not.

Now he retires from business at the age of 57 to head a great university of some 16,000 students. Surely his new position will give him wonderful opportunities for exploring "the constructive side of human relationships," in which his chief interest is centered.

WITHOUT A PRESIDENT

It may not be generally known that every four years the United States is without a President for several hours, but such is the fact. The term of the outgoing President expires at midnight on March 3, and the new President is usually sworn in about noon on the following day. During the intervening hours the country is without a chief executive. The question of whether a vacancy existed during this interval was discussed early in the history of the country. In response to an inquiry, Chief Justice John Marshall wrote on February 21, 1821:

"There has been uniformly and voluntarily an interval of twelve hours during which the executive power could not be exercised."

If an emergency demanded, the new President could be sworn in immediately after his predecessor's term expired at midnight on March 3, but no situation has ever existed to make this necessary.

MANY STATES' TELEPHONES INDEPENDENTLY OPERATED

The number of telephone and telegraph companies operating in California was reduced during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, from 132 to 117. This decrease is due to the discontinuance of a number of rural telephone lines, the consolidation of independent companies to form larger companies, and the acquisition of some independent companies by the Bell system, and also the consolidation of the Bell system companies in California into two companies, the one operating in northern and central California, and the other in southern California. About 11 per cent of the state's telephones are independently operated.

Although a number of new exchanges have been established during the last year, there were a number of exchanges discontinued, so that the total number of exchanges throughout the state remains practically the same as during the preceding year.

the second highest telephone development in the world, and New Zealand, with 10.2 telephones per 100 population, is the next highest. San Francisco, with a population of 637,212, has approximately 259,740 telephones within the city limits, although the San Francisco telephone exchange itself boasts considerably more than that number, some of them being in San Mateo county. Its ratio of 40.7 telephones per 100 population leads all large cities of the world for telephone development.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

The Rangoon Times, of Burma, India, reports a meeting of the Indian merchants, held in Karachi. The following resolution was adopted:

"This meeting of the members of the Indian mercantile bodies of Karachi appeals strongly to the country in general and the mercantile community in particular to take up the swadeshi movement with firm determination and urges on them to use all articles produced or manufactured in India unless it is impossible to obtain certain necessary articles of this country. The economic position of the country demands that every Indian must always insist on buying and using raw as well as manufactured articles produced in India, even at a sacrifice, not only as a patriotic duty in the present economic political crisis, but as a settled policy of national protection and well being. This meeting appreciates the patriotic spirit shown by the local piece-goods merchants in resolving not to import foreign piece-goods for twelve months and urges them to show the same spirit in the future."

The general idea of buying merchandise manufactured in your own country is a good one. Every person, before they purchase merchandise, should read the advertisements in their local paper and buy only those things that are manufactured in their own country.

According to Post Office Department records, a total distance of about 170,000 miles is covered every day by postmen carrying mail on foot to 20,000,000 persons in the 15 largest cities

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

Sunshine in the Rear

"It is the duty of every one to make at least one person happy during the week," said a Sunday school teacher. "Have you done so, Freddy?"

"Yes," said Freddy promptly.

"That's right. What did you do?"

"I went to see my aunt, and she was happy when I went home."

Calveras Cement.—Rock, Sand, Gravel, Etc.

Nailing Bridget

"You have an admirable cook, yet you are always growling about her to your friends."

"Do you suppose I want her lured away by some of them?"

A Smart Crack

An Irishman searching for work came to a blacksmith shop and happened to find the smith deluged with work, so he promptly gave the Irishman a job.

"Here," he said to the new helper as he took an iron out of the fire, "take this sledge hammer and when I nod my head hit it hard."

He then quickly nodded his head and the Irishman did as he had been told.

After hearing the testimony the coroner's verdict was "suicide!"

Hand picked Lump Coal for Furnaces.

Call the Barber

"Who is the fellow with the long hair?"

"He's a fellow from Yale."

"Oh, I have often heard of those Yale locks."

Hang on to the China

Farmer Wayback (starting home from the station): "Please, ma'am, do you wear false teeth?"

Fair Boarder (for the summer): "Sir!"

Farmer W.: "Oh, I don't mean to be curious. Only this road is a leetle rough, and ef your teeth ain't good and fast you'd better put 'em in your pocket."

Warmth without worry. Your home is safe when you burn Coal.

Neighbors are like digestion. The better they are the less you are aware of them.
